Those with an observant eye and a retentive memory will recognise the building thus described as the very one I sit in as I write this—the "Telegraph" building in Royal Avenue, which celebrates its 80th birthday to-day.

Quotation

A copy of the "Belfast Evening Telegraph" dated June 28, 1886, gives me the quotation.

"The 'Telegraph' can claim, indeed, to have been the pioneer of the Half-penny Newsport Press of Ireland, the earliest of the monerous and successful evening journals published in the leading towns of the United Kingdom.

United Kingdom.

"On the First of September, 1870, prior to the close of the Franco-German Warr, the inconcernal warr, the incomplete of the "Telegraph" appeared. The venture was regarded in many quarters as a bold one, containing no germ of stability, and a likely to expire with the war.

performance equipment designed to meet the needs of every type and size of business-today and tomorrow. At its heart is a series of direct-entry accounting machines so automatic that they can be operated without special training, so versatile that they can be switched in seconds to any one of a dozen or more different jobs. These machines not only produce the "hard copy" records you need to keep your business running smoothly, they can also be aquipped to translate everyday facts and figures into the language of computers ... thus giving you a direct line to an electronic data processing centre. Like all NCR products, they are based on the longest experience of designing business systems backed by constant research and development and a service organisation acknowledged to be the best in Europe. Talk batter accounting systems with NCR today!
